Transcript Discrepancies Cited

President Nixon's edited Watergate transcripts of a March 21, 1973, White House conversation with John W. Dean III contain numerous discrepancies when compared with the tapes of the conversation, according to a memorandum prepared by a House Judiciary Committee staff member.

The memo, which notes that Hunt's [illegible] was subsequently paid on the same day, was one of two confidential committee memoranda obtained by the Los Angeles Times Thursday.

Both memos allege discrepancies between the edited transcripts of presidential Watergate conversations released by Mr. Nixon and transcripts of those conversations obtained by the committee.

In the March 21 transcript released by Mr. Nixon to the committee and the public, the President is quoted as saying, "We can buy time." But according to the memo, the tape shows he said, "We should buy time."

The discrepancies [illegible] the public transcripts [illegible] show that [illegible] says, "We should buy time" and points out [illegible]

One of the memos offers various comments from Mr. Nixon supporting a conclusion that, contrary to his public statements, he was aware of many aspects of the Watergate cover-up prior to March 21.

The memo is described as a detailed analysis of excerpts of the Nixon-Dean conversation about hush-money payments, with a brief excerpt which includes comments by H. R. "Bob" Haldeman, then Mr. Nixon's chief of staff, who briefly joined the conversation. The thrust of the excerpts is that the President approved the payments to Hunt.

The memos were among 14 written by William P. Dixon, a staff attorney.

A memo by Dixon dated May 23 included excerpts of a March 21, 1973, presidential conversation with Dean. [illegible] The excerpts [illegible] are identical to the excerpts [illegible] the President's [illegible] to the nation in a televised speech last April 30.

In the [illegible] tapes will show [illegible] and he hoped conclusion [illegible] that he did not do anything wrong in connection with the Watergate break-in or the cover-up," Dixon wrote. He also acknowledged that the tape of March 21 is one which different meanings could be read into by different people.

The memo cites many [illegible] which are included in the edited transcript, but stresses the discrepancy between "can" and "should" on the tape in the committee's possession.

A May 24 memo quoted excerpts from the March 21 tape which Dixon said "may be interpreted to support a conclusion that prior to March 21 the President"—according to Dixon—"knew about" the following:

*The infiltration of the Edmund S. Muskie presidential campaign by a group directed by G. Gordon Liddy.

*The questioning of Charles W. Colson by the FBI.

*The use of a Cuban committee for the funneling of cash that Herbert W. Kalmbach raised for the Watergate defendants.

*The discussions of Colson and Hunt regarding commuta-

*Proposed [illegible]

*[illegible] Segretti [illegible]

*The [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Herbert [illegible]

*Haldeman's [illegible] Donald H. Segretti [illegible]

*Colson's [illegible] with Hunt's activities.

*The containment [illegible] Watergate investigation.

*Previous discussions [illegible] what action to take [illegible] a suggestion by Haldeman that a new grand jury be convened.

The May 24 memo also alleges numerous discrepancies from the published transcript as well as alleging several discrepancies between the transcript and the tape.

Mr. Nixon's edited transcript shows that in discussing the infiltration of Muskie's presidential campaign by the Committee for the Re-election of the President, Dean said the campaign had been infiltrated by a secretary. According to Dixon's memo, the tape shows Mr. Nixon already knew about the infiltration, that he told
